It is said that employment rates always lag business recovery. And higher productivity numbers for American industry, as well as profits for Ford and GM, could point to a healthier industry base.

But perhaps the real question of recovery is “Has the American buying public undergone a behavior change from its addiction to free wheeling spending?” It is this Recovery, not unlike that of an alcoholic in AA, that is more fundamental. We can only speak for ourselves.

Prudent Spending Americans have been saving at record levels and may now have sufficient funds to make necessary purchases without having to utilize credit. There is pent up demand for essential services: home repair and upgrades. Tax credits provide additional incentive for ‘Going Green’ in replacing appliances, insulating and reducing energy consumption.

Reduce your costs  Now is the time to make strategic decisions that will reduce the costs of maintaining your home. Conservation measures are not only cost saving, but also “Green” because they reduce your demand on energy resources.

♦  Plant trees. They not only add to the value of your home, but properly sited, they will provide shade and reduce your summer cooling costs. They also reduce your ‘carbon footprint’ by converting CO₂ to oxygen.

♦  Reevaluate your property use. A premium is now being given to outdoor ‘living areas’. This includes decks and patio spaces and cooking areas that can serve as outdoor rooms. Consider upgrading to these amenities as their maintenance cost is relatively low. The remaining outdoor area should be split evenly between gardens/natural areas and lawn. The net should be 1/3 living areas, 1/3 beds and 1/3 lawn.

♦  Determine the best type of lawn for you. Just by diminishing the lawn area, you will save on maintenance cost. You can save even more, up to 50%, by installing a warm season turf—Zoysia, Bermuda, Centipede or St. Augustine grass. This is because 1) they only need to be mowed half as often and 2) they require much less fertilizer (both of which will also reduce your carbon footprint).

Changes of this magnitude should be carefully conceived and executed. While you might be able to perform much of the work yourself, other items such as tree installation or masonry might be better left to a contractor. The place to start is with a professionally designed plan.

The landscape plan not only presents you with the layout of where things go, it provides the roadmap on how you’re going to get there. Itemizations of materials and labor will point the way on how to break the project into logical phases and what types of work you can do yourself. Let Leisure Landscapes show you how.

Celebrating 10 Great Years!

Congratulations to James and Stormmie Richardson for ten great years with Leisure Landscapes.

It all began in 1999 with the installation of landscaping and irrigation. Leisure modified a plan that the Richardsons had and reduced the number of plants specified, saving them thousands of dollars in installation and maintenance cost. Today, the plantings are mature and give their home the feeling of completeness and seclusion they were looking for. And Leisure Landscapes maintains the property to protect this investment.

James knows all about investments. He is the senior partner in RICHARDSON, CARRINGTON, WEAVER & ASSOCIATES, a member of the Ameriprise network of financial advisors specializing in retirement planning. You may have seen him on public access TV where his classes on investment for the NCSU Encore series are frequently aired.

His wife Stormmie is a discriminating buyer as well. After leaving IBM, she began an interior design service, “Expressions by Design”, that specializes in redesign and staging homes for sale. So she knows the importance of “curb appeal”.

I met with the Richardsons and asked them to share a little more information about themselves. Stormmie is that rare individual, a Raleigh native. James, although he was born in Henderson, NC, did most of his growing up in Orange, NJ. He moved to Raleigh in 1990 and in that same year began his financial career. They have been together all this time as well. “I originally planned to go to California” says James, “but loved it here so much I just stayed.”

Together, they share the same love for health and fitness, running and working out on the treadmill. Recently, they found common interest is dancing, where they are perfecting their cha-cha with the Arthur Murray studio.

Given today’s economy, I asked James if he had any financial advice. He said that he learned a lot from the 2000 crash. “Equities are a whole lot more volatile and less secure than we [investment advisors] were lead to believe. It’s a lot more important to have diversification in your investments…and look for opportunities.” His clients’ portfolios have benefited from this experience and have weathered the current recession with a minimum of erosion.

Now is the ideal time to mulch (just after leaf fall). Mulch will encapsulate any remaining leaves in the yard and bed and make them part of the mulching system that will:

1. remove leaves from plant and shrub canopies and keep them from blowing around the yard
2. insulate your plant and tree root systems from freezing winter temperatures and promote continued root growth
3. turn to topsoil and amend the clay soils below to become more fertile
4. give the yard a clean and neat appearance.

It’s a good idea to save some of the leaves and place them in the natural areas to serve as a natural weed barrier (and they’ll add desirable organic matter to the soil). On top of these, spread your choice of mulch.

Some popular varieties and their characteristics are:

10% off Triple-Shredded Hardwood Mulch Ordered by 12-11-09.

MULCH TYPE

Designer Mulch

Triple-Shredded Hardwood

+good color, texture
+best for soil
+best for suppressing weeds
+best for moisture retention
-can form ‘skin’, repelling water

Pine Straw

Pine Bark Nuggets

P.S.: These are the same reasons why Fescue lawns are seeded in the Fall.
Last year’s news was Recession. The year before that was Drought. Are we finally in Recovery? We examine that question in the article by the same name on page 1.

One of the things that has enabled Leisure Landscape to weather the economic storm has been the work that you, our existing customers, have sent our way. We thank you and want to recognize our loyal patrons. The article Celebrating 10 Great Years on page 2 talks about one such family, James and Stormmie Richardson, who are being recognized on their 10th anniversary with Leisure Landscapes with a $500 Leisure Gift Certificate.

As another way of saying thanks to you, we have a special offer on mulch this Fall. We have rolled back prices to pre-2006 levels. Most of you use our triple shredded hardwood mulch. We will give you a 10% discount just for placing your order by December 11, 2009. Read more in the article Save $$$ with Mulch on page 3.

In our next issue, we will recognize the remaining ten of our all-time Top Twenty patrons. Speaking of patrons, we continue to support the arts and the General Assembly and Carolina Harmony’s production of “Songs of the Season”. Please join them in this Holiday tribute this Saturday, December 5, 2009 at Fletcher Theatre. Order tickets online at www.GeneralAssemblyChorus.org.
